Robeen Castle ruins. Robeen Kowland. Patrick Farley.
no right-of-way. Not in charge of O.P.W.

of this castle, concerning whose history nothing is known beyond that it was one of the many Bunker fortresses erected on N., shores, and east. of Lough Leane -- only a badly broken, irregular portion of one wall some 15' long and perhaps 20' high - with attached to it a piece of the gable, remains.

Castle ruins in Leklon (Killarney district). J. Hughes. No right-of-way. Remains consist of a 20' high portion of wall, 6' thick and 15' long at its top and 10' at bottom. If its history local account gives it as formerly a Bunker castle which later belonged to the Blakes family.

A lake, now drained, was situated beside the castle. There is a local legend of a monster which inhabited the waters and manifested the right-of-way.

Castle ruins in Castle Ville (Killarney area). Walter Heaney.
no right-of-way. Three fragments of a rectangular fortress which was about 21' x 14' internally rising to a height of about 12'. Walls - 1' thick. A bit of a 4' wide stairway with 3 steps yet exists in the south-east corner.

A Bunker stronghold of whose history nothing seems to be known.

Hags Castle in Lough Leane. Opposite Annie's Kowland (in Robeen area). Some few hundred yards out in the lake. Very old and would appear to be some 25' high. A Bunker castle. (Impossible to survey - no boats).

Foundation walls of Bunk's Castle in Bellacoloe. John Bunkley. no right-of-way. In 1511 the castle was taken from Bunk by Sir Edward Tilton, first President of Cromwell. In 1585 it was restored to Bunk. In 1618
Henry Bingham signed it. (Historic Ireland: please see)

Church ruins in Annies. Stephen Magagh. 10' B. of W.
A gable only remains to a height of some 25'. There is a broken esp.

Said to have originally been a Benedictine Convent established by St. Mac William, De Burgo chief. Subject to Fiscaverty (near Ballinrobe). Was Franciscan in the 16th century and then given to the Augustinians of Belleneake.
Was later suppressed and given to the Canons of Glenside.

Brick elements - a 10' long by 4' high fragment of the aisle wall in Hobeen in the burial ground by roadway.
No history or tradition.

25' x 3'. Walls broken back to a height of 1'. No distinctive features. No history or tradition. No right-of-way.

Church ruins in Kilcommon Township. In graveyard. Right of way. Of these there remains a gable and a 25' long portion of inner curtain. Gable still stands but broken away from curtain.
Chancel is 25' wide. Gable, steep-pitched, is 25/30' high. Its 34" thick. Maitled doorway of shaped limestone 5' 10" high and 4' 15" wide. Over it a rectangular shaped esp about 3' x 2' whose mullions are flat.

Co. Mayo.

The remaining portion of south wall is 6' thick. There are the remains of two, broken, open plain featured except that one is set in a rough, plain pointed embrasure, same 10' high. This wall is about 14' high.

The other side-wall portion is some 11' high and is 2½' thick.

Probably a garrison church. Killarney is still longer much of Limerick - whether saint or not - is uncertain.

Very slight remnants of an old Chapel in Clegganwatta. John Casey - in whose house it is said the attending priest lodged.

Brownstone House ruins in Brownstown, David Walsh. No right-of-way. A three story T-shaped plain residence. Windows, doors and roof gone. Not a very big house. Was for a long time the residence of the Browns family. Land proprietors and related to the Galway family of same name. Uneventful history. Inhabited for about 60 years. The last owner was M.P. for Mayo.

Woolley's tower - octagonal outside, circular inside. 14' high and 10' in diameter. In Mrs. McNamee's. Said to have been erected by the Brown owner. Either a watch tower or a pigeon-house - probably the latter.

Remains of "Yeats' House" in Greencastle. Pat Yeates. No right-of-way. Family residence of Blakes - later of a band master named French, and finally of a man named Seeger, a bantler of Dublin, who lived there for at least 70 years. On Kilcommon road.
